Jacob Morris of Morris Brothers, said that he had locked out twenty-five operatives because he did not want them in the shop. He said he intends to put the electric machines within ten days, and do without the operatives altogether.

Before the lockout the Secretary of the Union wrote to him, he said, asking his firm to help the Union to raise the scale of wages. This he refused to do, as he did not want to intersers with other members of the trade, in his letter to the Union he asked why, if the world with the cooking dwelling on Comstock street, this manufacturers could get men to work for six
